UNIVERSITY OF APPLIED SCIENCES

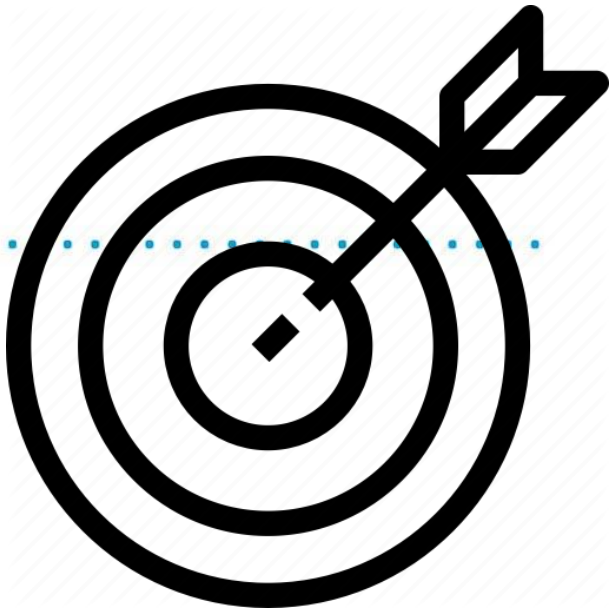
Last time



Persona's, empathy maps and customer journeys:

- Were mostly based on assumptions;
- Were based on target audiences that weren't even clear yet;
- Were based on business ideas that changed over the last weeks?

Time to make them more accurate, more research based!

UNIVERSITY OF APPLIED SCIENCES

Question…

How valuable are the insights in your target group right now?

Last time

- Based on what you thought as a company, not based on research
- What is the situation now? What kind of research did you do? What were the findings?

How?

How to collect your data:

- (User) interviews : how many interviews did you already do? What did you learn?
  - Conduct user surveys regularly
- Focus groups
- Google Analytics, social media analytics
- Desk research

What do you know right now?

Based on research:

About:

- Demographical factors?
- The needs, motivations, ambitions, frustrations etc?
- Media use and buying behavior?
- The most important characteristics for you as a company? Why and how are you going to use them?

How attractive is your target group/different segments?

In terms of:

- How homogeneous is the group?
- Can you measure different characteristics of the group?
- Are there enough potential customers who fit the criteria?
- How can you reach the group with your message?

- What do you need to quantify your group or segments?

Persona

Last time, almost all your statements were based on ideas and intuition.

- What does your ideal customer look like?
- What does their buying behavior look like?
- How can you get your brand in touch with your audience?

UNIVERSITY OF APPLIED SCIENCES

Persona

What is the current status?

- What would you like to add?
- What would you like to improve?
- Are there still pieces of information missing?

Buyer versus customer journey

Differences?

What do the differences implicate?

UNIVERSITY OF APPLIED SCIENCES

Buyer journey versus customer journey

- Potential customers versus existing customers
- First buy or a rebuy
- Each requires a different strategy

“A buyer's journey is the process a prospect goes through to become a customer, while a customer's journey is the process of nurturing existing customers to retain their business.”

Different kind of behavior each stage

Think of two challenges that your persona has each stage

- Awareness (the potential customer starts to notice a problem or need)
  - Questions, not a clear solution already
  - Better understanding of their problem
- Consideration (the potential customer starts searching for a solution and may be comparing several options)
  - Considering potential solutions
- Decision (the potential customer is finalizing the details of their choice)
  - Ready to make a purchase decision
  - Go to a provider that they like, know and trust

Different kind of content each stage

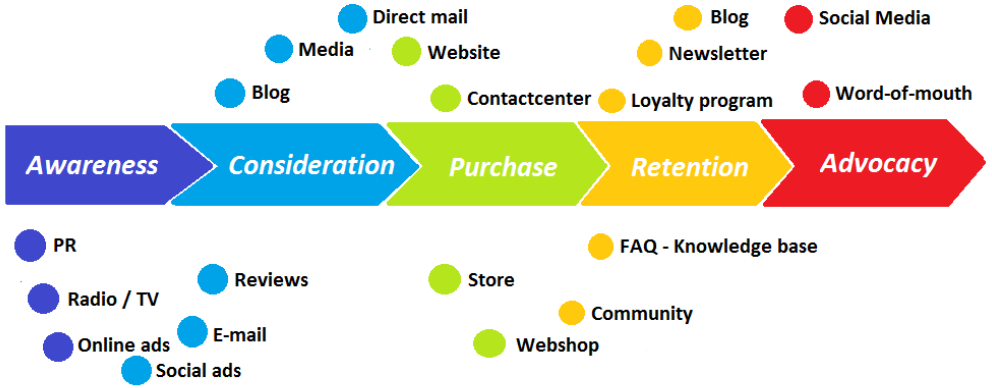
What to do? Conclusion; it’s all about phasing



See Think Do Care framework

Bekendheid	Overweging	Aankoop	Loyaliteit
De grootst mogelijke doelgroep	Doelgroep met interesse	Doelgroep met koop intentie	Bestaande klanten

Time to practice!

Start with your buyer journey

- Describe the buyer journey for your company
- Choose (at least) three relevant touchpoint per phase (awareness, consideration, purchase) for your potential customers.
- Describe which content to offer them in each phase

Simple, Appropriate, Relevant, Meaningful and Appealing

You can use this table (focus on buyerjourney phases):

Phase	Short description of the (intention of) the persona	Possible needs/challenges of your persona	Content (solutions) from your company	Possible touchpoints	Goal of your company
Awareness
Consideration
Decision/purchase
Retention
